LOVE AND LABOR.

We die not all; for our deeds remain, To crown with honor or war with stain Through endless sequence of years to come, Our lives shall speak when our lips are dumb.

What though we perish unknown to fame, Our tomb forgotten, and lost our name, Since nought is wasted in heaven or earth, And nothing dies to which God gives birth.

Though life be joyous and death be cold, And pleasures pall as the world grows old, Yet God has granted our hearts relief, For Love and Labor can conquer grief.

Love sheds a light on the gloomy way, And Labor hurries the weary day, Though death be fearful and life be hard, Yet Love and Labor shall win reward.

If Love can dry up a single tear, If life-long Labor avail to clear, A single web from before the true, Then Love and Labor have won their due.

What though we mourn, we can comfort pain; What if we die, so the truth be pain; A little spark from high desire Shall kindle others and grow a fire.

We are not worthy to work the whole; We have no strength which may save a soul; Enough for us if our life begin Successful struggle with grief and sin.

Labor is mortal and fades away, But Love shall triumph in perfect day Labor may wither beneath the sod, But Love lives ever, for Love is God.

STRANGE SHADOWS.

'And I am to use this about the ship?'

'Yes! yes!'

'And crowd on all the work we can,' joined in the carpenter.

'Yes! yes!'

'That is easy understood,' observed
the hired man.

'I only wish that I could swing a broad axe.'

'Now I must go,' said the lady,
taking the hard hand of Goody
Brown in her friendly clasp. 'You have been kind to me and I can never forget it. 'Only help me to leave these shores, and see if I prove ungateful.'

These words had hardly left the lady's lips when she was outside the door, and moving toward the woods
in a rapid walk.

These three men and Goody Brown flocked to the window, and looked after her as she moved through the tight of a moon buried half the time under fleecy whiteness of drifting clouds. She approached the woods, and they saw her engulphed in shadows that seemed to move and sway with the wind. Directly she came forth, riding on a milk-white horse, that stood out from the leaden shadows distinct as marble; for that instant the moon threw off its burden of cloud, and rode clear and bright across a plain of blue sky.

Directly
another horse and rider, that looked black as ebony in the distance, came out of the shadows, and then a third;
but whether the riders of these black steeds were men or women no one could tell. For a little time the horses kept along the edge of the woods, but at last they plunged into some forest path and were gone.

Still the inmates of the farm-house watched by the window, for there was something weird in the woman's departure which stimulated curiosity.

As they looked, the edge of the wood grew alive. Dusky forms moved, to and fro, now in the darkness, now in faint gleams of light; and the forests began to sway and moan as if oppressed by some evil presence, which made all its boughs heave and its follage quiver. Then a muffled yell broke out from the heart of the woods, and a line of what seemed to

'Yes! yes!'
 'That is easy understood,' observed the hired man.
 'I only wish that I could swing a broad axe.'

'Now I must go,' said the lady, taking the hard hand of Goody Brown in her friendly clasp. 'You have been kind to me and I can never forget it. 'Only help me to leave these shores, and see if I prove ungrateful.'

These words had hardly left the lady's lips when she was outside the door, and moving toward the woods in a rapid walk.

These three men and Goody Brown flocked to the window, and looked after her as she moved through the tight of a moon buried half the time under fleecy whiteness of drifting clouds. She approached the woods, and they saw her engulphed in shadows that seemed to move and sway with the wind. Directly she came forth, riding on a milk-white horse. That stood out from the leaden shadows distinct as marble; for that instant the moon threw off its burden of cloud, and rode clear and bright across a plain of blue sky. Directly another horse and rider, that looked black as ebony in the distance, came out of the shadows, and then a third; but whether the riders of these black steeds were men or women no one could tell. For a little time the horses kept along the edge of the woods, but at last they plunged into some forest path and were gone.

Still the inmates of the farm-house watched by the window, for there was something weird in the woman's departure which stimulated curiosity. As they looked, the edge of the wood grew alive. Dusky forms moved, to and fro, now in the darkness, now in fitful gleams of light; and the forests began to sway and moan as if oppressed by some evil presence, which made all its boughs heave and its foliage quiver. Then a muffled yell broke out from the heart of the woods, and a line of what seemed to be human forms came into an open field that lay close to the forest, and, curving onward like an enormous serpent, crept away through the darkness.

There was little said in the farm-house that night about these mysterious appearances, but a vague superstition took possession of those three men, and they felt as if the gold they had received might vanish into thin air before morning.

When the day broke, Brown and his hired man went into the barn to clear the thrashing-floor of all incumbrances. They found the door shut and every thing in place. But when the man went to the corner where those ponderous boxes had been stored, they were gone. Then the thick hair on Jason Brown's head stood up with terror, and turning to the astonished look of his companion he went into the house.

'Wife, take that purse from your bosom and give it to me.'

The woman obeyed him, and drew forth the purse. He snatched it from her hold, left the house, and ran down to the shore. When he reached the verge of the water, great drops stood on his forehead, and he panted for breath. A little way off was a line of breakers dashing up spray from a cluster of hidden rocks.

NOON IN THE WOODS.

Brown waded knee-deep into the water, swung his arm backward, and hurled the purse into the seething foam.

Old Wahpee had procured a forest-bred horse for Barbara Stafford and another for his own use. Restless from a strong desire to leave the country, she had besought him to act as her guide to the stone farmhouse. Their object was unknown to the family, for the Indian was sadly afraid that Samuel Parris would know of the share in the business, and for this reason Barbara promised to keep her journey a secret. Tituba alone of all the household was taken into their confidence, and she undertook to divert attention from Barbara's movements.

This was no very difficult matter, for the cousins were occupied with each other, and Samuel Parris in his self-absorption would hardly have missed his guest had she remained absent a week. So one day Barbara went as usual into the margin of the forest, mounted the white horse that Wahpee held by the bridle, and following a trail which the Indian informed her led by a short cut to Boston, entered fearlessly on her adventure. The vast solitude of the wilderness harmonized with the solemn depression of her own thoughts. Its profound silence filled her with a sentiment of sublime resignation. Sometimes, as she rode along, a whispered prayer brightened her face, and you would have thought that she was travelling through those deep forest shades directly into that happier world where the weary are at rest. So far as conversation went, she was completely alone. Wahpee never talked, and if she asked him a question it was answered in some brief incoherency. So deep was the forest and so remote the way, that wild deer leaped across her path, and stopped to gaze on her more than once with almost human curiosity.

No matter how deep or persistent unhappiness may be, there is nothing in nature that will charm it half away, if the heart it troubles is capable of real poetic sentiment. The unselfish and pure-minded cannot look upon all the munificence of God lavished everywhere in objects of beauty and usefulness—for the glorious Artist of the universe has created no one thing that has not a peculiar gift of beauty to recommend it along the margin of the brook, where she observed, with some surprise, that the grasses and ferns had been recently trodden into something like a path. The brook swept its crystal curves around one side of the clearing, which took the sun so warmly, then widened into a beautiful pool, margined with golden willows, growing wildly, under a sumptuous drape of vines. Beyond this basin of water Barbara saw a column of blue smoke curling up from the foot of a great hemlock, and flashes of fire shot in and out through the quivering green of the undergrowth.

Pleased and expectant for Barbara began to surmise that she had not been brought to that lovely place by accident, she followed her guide in silence, and at last came out on a mound of grandeur, surrounded, covered so thickly with grass that her feet trod a hundred tiny flowers to death without her seeing them. The willows that margined the miniature lake at its base, and the hemlocks that crowded up from the forest, hedged in this pretty eminence, flickering its edges with tangle of shadows and sunshine, but leaving a broad flat rock on the summit bathed in golden light. Around this rock, clusters of wild trumpet vines, trailing albus, and golden bitter-sweet, wove their beauties together in luxuriant wildness, creeping in rich traceries over the rock, or falling in garlands down the grassy sides of the mound. The centre of this rocky table was bright with sparkling crystals and clean as granite could be made. Somewhat more than the hand of nature had been at work there. Not a dead leaf or broken twig could be found littering on the rock or in the grass.

'Ah, how lovely!' exclaimed the lady, flinging back the hood of her mantle, and looking around in pleasant astonishment. 'Surely, Wahpee, this is not your work?'

'Would you be offended, lady, if it were mine?' said a voice close by, and from beneath the bending hemlocks came forth Philip, or Metacombet, the young man whose fate had been so strangely enwoven with her own.

'Nay, Philip, I am neither offended nor surprised. It was kind to provide me this lovely spot to rest in, and I am glad to look once more on the face of a friend.'

Barbara sat down on the rock as she spoke, and untasting the clasp of her scarlet cloak, allowed it to fall loosely around her. Philip flung himself on the grass at her feet, kin-kets full of blue berries, with whom on them.

This rustic meal the woman brought forth to the mound, and placed upon the rock, without a sign of curiosity about the stranger, or a spoken word, Barbara looked on in wonder. The whole scene really did appear like enchantment to her. Philip took a case from a pouch by his side, and extracted from it a knife and fork, mounted with silver. Barbara's eyes brightened; they had been her gift to the young man when he first went forth on his travels after those dreary years of bondage.

'Eat,' he said, carving one of the birds with his hunting-knife, and see if wholesome food may not be found in the woods.'

'Yes, if you eat also,' she answered. 'In your hard journey through life we may at least take this one quiet meal together.'

Phillip took a piece of the bird, but could not eat; his heart was too full.

'This is our last meal together on earth, perhaps,' he said, in a low voice. 'If you return to England I may perish here, and never look upon your face again.'

'My friend, there is another world,' Barbara answered, 'and at the longest only a few short years divides us from it.'

'But what if the Indian's hunting-grounds and the white-man's heaven should be eternally Sundered?' answered the young chief mournfully.

'That cannot be,' was the gentle reply. 'If friendship and love are immortal, God will not make a torture of his holiest gifts. In the next world as in this I shall surely be your friend.'

'And the friendship of angels must be sweeter than earthly love,' answered the youth. 'That shall content me, lady: something tells me that it will not be long before I can claim this beautiful promise, yonder. The path that I have chosen is full of danger, and its end may be speedy death.'

Barbara looked down upon him with all the light of a noble soul in her eyes.

'Oh, Phillip! may you never learn how sweet the hopes of death can be to a human soul.'

The young man smiled mournfully.

'Perhaps I have already learned that,' he said, 'But I am wrong, inhospitable, selfish; my complaints trouble you, and you cannot eat. Come, come; let me crave another bird, this is cold.'

the blackness of night was swept away, and all the forest trees turned of a rich, golden green, inexpressibly beautiful.

'We are near the encampment,' said Philip, and a proud smile lighted his face, upon which the sudden radiance shone. 'Ride on, dear lady; your halting place of yesterday is but just ahead: that flaming pine-tree will light us to it. This time you will find it filled with warriors.'

The horse which Phillip bestrode leaped forward while he was speaking, and with a spirited bound Barbara's white steed sprang after him.

Directly they came in sight of the clearing, illuminated by the burning pine, which, uplifted by a ledge of rocks from a level with the forest, towered behind it like a steeple of quivering fire. Bathed in this golden light Barbara saw the turf mound on which she had taken that noonday repast; and under it the miniature lake with all its crystal waves flame-tinted by the fire. The dark which fell in a perpetual seemed eddying and shimmering in the depth of its waters, and the willows which drooped over them were of a rich luminous green that quivered with every stir of the wind.

The larger clearing was less broadly in the light, but that presented one of the grandest scenes that human eye ever dwelt upon. There swarming, justling, heaving together in gorgeous masses, a multitude of savages crowded the open space. Within the glow of that mighty council-fire the scattered tribe of the Pomperoun had gathered to meet the son of their skin king. Burning with war paint, and resplendent with barbarous ornaments, they turned the sweet rural scene of the morning into a war-camp so wild and picturesque that the lady uttered a cry of astonishment when she came thus suddenly upon it.

'Do not be afraid,' said Philip, reining in his horse and lending a triumphant look upon his forced guest. 'You are safe here. Keep close to my side, and I will show you how hard it is to subjugate a brave people.'

Barbara drew her rein tight: this scene, so grandly beautiful, the passionate eloquence in her companion's look and voice, aroused all the enthusiasm of her nature.

'Ride on; I will follow!' she said. With grave dignity, and curbing the heroic fire that burned in his eyes, the young man advanced into the clearing. Barbara followed,

No matter how deep or persistent unhappiness may be, there is nothing in nature that will charm it half away, if the heart it troubles is capable of real poetic sentiment. The unselfish and pure-minded cannot look upon all the munificence of God lavished everywhere in objects of beauty and usefulness—for the glorious Artist of the universe has created no one thing that has not a peculiar gift of beauty to recommend it—without an outburst of thankfulness. If the supreme object for which the heart yearns so hungrily is withheld, nature holds forth a thousand lures of beauty which are sure to draw the soul out of itself and thus nearer to its God.

Barbara Stafford was very unhappy. Since landing in America, her life had been one struggle. She was a woman of gentle nature, not less pliant and sweet because her will was firm and her power of endurance wonderful. She was now absolutely without earthly hope. It she turned to the past, it was full of pain. The future lay before her a desert. She could not endure, even in thought, to travel over the waste which lay between her coming sea-voyage and the grave. But though unhappy, disappointed, and dejected, she was neither bitter nor cynical. The grandeur and breadth of character which had led her silently into making almost impossible sacrifices would be sufficient to carry her to the end without faltering. Her history and her object, whatever they were, remained a secret in her own bosom. That she suffered, no one who looked upon the lines about her mouth and the shadows in those eyes could doubt. Yet a casual observer would have guessed nothing of this, and even a friend might have sometimes mistaken her kindness and urbanity for the expression of a serene life.

Let her history be what it might, the woman was sufficient unto herself. She knew how to suffer and grow strong, without hope and without counsel. That day, as she rode through the woods, so rich in leafiness, so lavish in beauty, her soul expanded itself thankfully to the sweet influences that opened upon her. She was no longer young, but, perhaps, more capable of enjoyment when alone with God's works for that very reason. So for the hour she put aside the one great sorrow that haunted her life, and rode cheerfully through the woods, enjoying each ferny knoll or grassy hollow, with a brook whispering along the bottom, as if she had nothing but sunshine in her heart.

It must have been somewhat after noon when Wahpee came upon a little opening in the trees, where some Indian hunter had cleared away the undergrowth and cut down a few trees, in order to build a lodge, which was now a heap of mossy logs. It was a lovely spot, lifted a little from the level of the woods and crested with half a dozen stately old trees, through which the sunshine came shimmering down upon the

'Ah, how lovely!' exclaimed the lady, flinging back the hood of her mantle, and looking around in pleasant astonishment. 'Surely, Wahpee, this is not your work?'

'Would you be offended, lady, if it were mine?' said a voice close by, and from beneath the bending hemlocks came forth Philip, or Metacombet, the young man whose fate had been so strangely enwoven with her own.

Barbara sat down on the rock as she spoke, and unfastening the clasp of her scarlet cloak, allowed it to fall loosely around her. Philip flung himself on the grass at her feet, kindling up his green with the gorgeousness of his savage raiment. Seated thus they could catch gleams of blue water under the willow branches, and watch the broad lily pods heaving softly up and down as if stirred with human pulses.

Barbara's face brightened, and her lips parted with smiles. She was naturally of a cheerful disposition, and such beauty as this gladdened her whole being.

'It seems like enchantment,' she said; 'some beautiful witchcraft has been at work here.'

'It has brought a smile to that face, and I am happy,' answered the young man.

'Have you known this spot long?'

'I look, like a corner in an English park. The clearing must have been made years ago, for, save that once massive stump, which is now more than half moss, no trace of the axe is visible.'

'It was cleared years ago, for I was born here.'

'Here?'

'Yes, my father was out hunting with the chiefs of his tribe. He never went even to the war-path that his wife did not follow and rest somewhere near him. A few of the old logs lie in the clearing yonder even yet, held together by the moss that has been years and years creeping over them. When Wahpee told me that you would ride through the forest, I directed him to bring you along this trail. But you look tired and must be hungry.'

'Yes, a little tired, and not a little hungry,' answered Barbara. 'In my anxiety I quite forgot that food might be needed on the way.'

'Would to heaven that I could always think for you!' was the humble reply. 'Oh, lady, how lovely these forests would be if you never left them!'

Barbara looked around, and her eyes filled with tears. 'If you were my son.'

The young man made an impatient gesture.

'Or my brother,' she added. 'Then, Philip, I might find that rest here which all other places in the world deny me. But my destiny leads me into the world, where I shall be far more alone than you can be here.'

The young man looked searchingly into Barbara's face, and saw how honestly she spoke.

'I know! I know from the first how hopeless this fatal love was,' he said, passionately. 'Yet spite of everything it will break forth to offend you.'

'No, I am not offended,' answered

next world as in this I shall surely be your friend.'

'And the friendship of angles must be sweeter than earthly love,' answered the youth. 'That shall content me, lady: something tells me that it will not be long before I can claim this beautiful promise, up yonder. The path that I have chosen is full of danger, and its end may be speedy death.'

'Perhaps I have already learned that,' he said. 'But I am wrong, inhospitable, selfish; my complaints trouble you, and you cannot eat. Come, come; let me crave another bird, this is cold.'

An hour after this Barbara mounted her horse, and accompanied by her old guide took the forest path again. As the night came on, and the shadows around her grew blacker and blacker, through the tree tops were aflame with scarlet and gold she became conscious of some strange companionship in the woods. Sometimes it seemed as if the mellow tread of hoofs stole up from the recesses of the forest. Then she could hear the bend and sway of branches; and, closer still, whispering sounds among the leaves, as if every thing around her were full of active life. What these signs could be was a wonder to her; neither restless birds nor deer, bounding through the undergrowth in flocks, could produce a noise at once so subdued and persistent. But no harm came, or appeared to threaten her. On the contrary, legions of spirits seemed to guard her path unseen. It was dark before Barbara came out of the thick of the forest, and made her way to the farm house. Up to the very margin of the trees these whispering sounds and almost inaudible footsteps accompanied her. The moment Barbara's feet crossed that threshold hundreds on hundreds of human beings swarmed out of the woods, and moved noiselessly toward Jason Brown's barn.

A crash, as of broken boards, followed by a low, rattling sound, came from the building. Then, as each man filed by the door, a musket was placed in his hand, which he carried straight to the woods, following the warrior who had gone before, as savages tread a war-path. It was the end of this procession that Jason Brown had seen, coiling like a serpent along the edge of the forest after Barbara Stafford came forth into the moonlight on her white horse and rode away. Of all the arms secreted in the barn, not a gun was left; even the boxes were carried off in fragments.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE BRACON FIRE.

Barbara rode on her way, altogether unconscious that the woods around her swarmed with armed men, who had been for hours following her at a distance. But all at once another hoof-tread sounded in her path, and looking around she saw young Philip, mounted on a horse that seemed black in the darkness, riding close by her side, while Wahpee lagged behind.

'Do not be afraid; I have been

It was a lovely spot, lifted a little from the level of the woods and crested with half a dozen stately old trees, through which the sunshine came shimmering down upon the forest turf, luring ten thousand lovely blossoms up through its greenness. Half in the sunshine, half in the shadow of overhanging pines and hemlocks, a lovely brook went singing on its way through bending ferns and the wild vines whose roots drank life from its crystal waves; while around this bright spot the dark barriers of the forest crowded up on three sides, rendering its green slopes more sunny from their sombre contrast.

Barbara drew up her horse as she felt the sunshine bursting so warmly over her path, and uttered an exclamation, half astonishment, half delight: 'Why, Wahpee! You have led the way to a paradise,' she said, gazing around. 'One almost forgets to be mortal in a place like this, but my horse reminds us that he at least is hungry.'

In her admiration, Barbara had loosened her bridle, and the beautiful animal which she rode was cropping the sward with great zest, eagerly sweeping up grass and blossoms in one fragrant mouthful, as if he feared that her hand might the next instant curb him up from his sweet repast.

Wahpee got down from his own horse, and cast him loose. Then he lifted Barbara from her saddle, and saying only, 'Come here,' led her face, and I am happy, answered the young man.

'Have you known this spot long?' said Barbara. 'It looks, like a corner in an English park. The clearing must have been made years ago, for, save that once massive stump, which is now more than half moss, no trace of the axe is visible.'

When Wahpee told me that you would ride through the forest, I directed him to bring you, along this trail. But you look tired and must be hungry.'

'Yes, a little tired, and not a little hungry,' answered Barbara. 'In my anxiety I quite forgot that food might be needed on the way.'

'Would to heaven that I could always think for you!' was the humble reply. 'Oh, lady, how lovely these forests would be if you never left them!'

Barbara looked around, and her eyes filled with tears. 'If you were my son.'

The young man made an impatient gesture.

'Or my brother,' she added 'Then, Philip, I might find that rest here which all other places in the world deny me. But my destiny leads me into the world, where I shall be far more alone than you can be here.'

The young man looked searchingly into Barbara's face, and saw how honestly she spoke.

'No, I am not offended,' answered the lady. 'God forbid that honest affection should anger me! I am only sorrowful that my destiny is always to give pain. I do not even reason with you, Philip, knowing well that human love is not the growth of human will. But you must learn patience, my friend, and strive, as I must, to be useful, and with God's help, happy, without love.'

Philip shook his head, and arose suddenly that she might not see how near he was to weeping. He advanced a few paces into the forest and came to another small opening in the trees. There a fire was blazing up redly, surrounded by a group of Indian women, who were busy turning a half-dozen birds, fastened by delicate withes of bark to the branches overhead, and roasting before the fire.

'Come,' said the chief, in the Indian tongue, 'is all ready?'

A woman was busy peeling strips of birch bark from the trunk of a sapling close by. She cut the bark into fragments and gave them to the woman about the fire, who laid the roasted birds daintily upon them, nestling each one in leaves from a golden spice bush which grew near. Then they took hot corn-cakes from the ashes, and brought from under a cool thicket two little painted bas-wonder to her; neither restless birds nor deer, bounding through the undergrowth in flocks, could produce a noise at once so subdued and persistent. But no harm came, or appeared to threaten her. On the contrary, legions of spirits seemed to guard her path unseen. It was dark before Barbara came out of the thick of the forest, and made her way to the farm house. Up to the very margin of the trees these whispered sounds and almost inaudible footsteps accompanied her. The moment Barbara's feet crossed that threshold hundreds on hundreds of human beings swarmed out of the woods, and moved noiselessly toward Jason Brown's barn.

A crash, as of broken boards, followed by a low, rattling sound, came from the building. Then, as each man filed by the door, a musket was placed in his hand, which he carried straight to the woods, following the warrior who had gone before, as savages tread a war-path. It was the end of this procession that Jason Brown had seen, coiling like a serpent along the edge of the forest after Barbara's Stafford came forth into the moonlight on her white horse and rode away. Of all the arms secreted in the barn, not a gun was left; even the boxes were carried off in fragments.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE BRACON FIRE.

Barbara rode on her way, altogether unconscious that the woods around her swarmed with armed men, who had been for hours following her at a distance. But all at once another hoof-tread sounded in her path, and looking around she saw young Philip, mounted on a horse that seemed black in the darkness, riding close by her side, while Wahpee lagged behind.

'Do not be afraid; I have been near you all the time,' said the young horseman.

The woods were so dark, except where the light of a clear moon could penetrate to the path she rode over, that Barbara was glad of the addition to her escort. So they rode on together at a quick pace, penetrating more and deeply into the heart of the wilderness. The hum and rush of what seemed a current of wind in the distance still haunted her way. Sometimes she heard the crackling of underbush, afar off; but these sounds were so continuous that she soon ceased to regard them. Then for a mile or two, all was profound stillness. It seemed as if every living thing had suddenly dropped to sleep upon the earth, and in the leaves. The very moonlight ceased to tremble along the forest turf, for the branches which had sent it quivering like forest work around her path, hung motionless over Barbara's head.

Over the soft turf the three horses sped till the moon went down, and midnight came on. Then, all at once, the woods just ahead of this party burst into a sudden flame; a vivid column of fire shot up to the sky, leaping, hissing, and rioting along the sapless boughs of a dead pine-tree, that crowned an eminence around which their path led. TEA VS. BRANDY—WHICH

There would be much amusement among the licensed victuallers if it were made clear by medical science that tea is as injurious to health as alcohol if taken in excess, and that total abstinence will be shocked if they find themselves one day classed with drunkards and looked upon as subjects for restraint and reformation. And yet there seems to be grave doubt as to whether tea drinking is not unwholesome to the public health as much as brandy or gin drinking. In Dr. Fothergill's work, lately published, on the "Maintenance of Health," after pointing out that every man who takes stimulants as a necessity is drawing on his physiological reserve fund," he says that "tea will, if taken to excess, produce grievous evidence of systematic exhaustion. Neuralgia, sleeplessness, palpitation of the heart, and muscular tremors follow the excessive use of tea as well as of alcohol; and all stimulants, by virtue of their nature as stimulants, have certain injurious effects. A stimulant, no matter what its character, enables a man to get at his physiological reserve fund—if it did not enable him to expend himself." In other words, the tea may be as formidable an engine of destruction as the brandy bottle. If this view is correct, and very possibly it is so, then there is no safety for man, woman, or child except in that home of amulets, the eastern.

THE EXPRESS ROBBERY.

FILKINS AT WORK IN CANADA.

The Troy "Times" thinks it can make a pretty good guess as to the whereabouts of John I. Filkins, the Albany express robber, who recently escaped from Clinton prison. The details of the express robbery in Canada, described in the telegraph columns, lead to the almost positive conclusion that he is skulking about in that Dominion, and the similarity between this affair and his adventures in Albany is so striking as to induce the belief that he led the plundering band of masqueraders who boarded a train on the Great Western Railroad Saturday, and robbed the agent of the American Express company of between $30,000 and $40,000. The operation is certainly a bold one. Five disguised men enter the baggage car, seize, bind and gag the baggage master, and then dispose in like manner of the express agent. Having the car all to themselves now, they deliberately rob the safe, and travel along with the train till a convenient landing place favors their escape. "It is the Albany crime over again, save that no attempt is made this time to kill the express agent." If this is Filkins' work, as we think it is, we shall doubtless hear of the repetitions of the crime until the scoundrel is arrested or brought to a summary tragic end.

This rustic meal the woman brought fourth to the mound and placed upon the rock, without a sign of curiosity about the stranger, or a spoken word, Barbara looked on in wonder. The whole scene really did appear like enchantment to her. Phillip took a case from a pouch by his side, and extracted from it a knife and fork, mounted with silver. Barbara's eyes brightened; they had been her gift to the youngman when he first went forth on his travels after those dreary years of bondage.

"Eat," he said, carving one of the birds with his hunting-knife, "and see if wholesome food may not be found in the woods."

"Yes, if you eat also," she answered. "In your hard journey through life we may at least take this one quiet meal together."

Phillip took a piece of the bird, but could not eat; his heart was too full.

"This is our last meal together on earth, perhaps," he said, in a hoarse voice. "If you return to England I may perish here, and never look upon your face again."

"My friend, there is another world," Barbara answered, "and at the longest only a few short years divides us from it."

"But what if the Indian's hunting-grounds and the white-man's heaven should be eternally sundered?" answered the young chief mournfully.

"That cannot be," was the gentle reply. "If friendship and love are immortal, God will not make a torture of his holiest gifts. In the next world as in this I shall surely be your friend."

"And the friendship of angels must be sweeter than earthly love," answered the youth. "That shall content me, lady; something tells me that it will not be long before I can claim this beautiful promise, up yonder. The path that I have chosen is full of danger, and its end may be speedy death."

Barbara looked down upon him with all the light of a noble soul in her eyes.

"Oh, Phillip! may you never learn how sweet the hopes of death can be to a human soul."

The young man smiled mournfully.

"Perhaps I have already learned that," he said, "But I am wrong, I am wrong, I am wrong."

"Ride on! I will follow," she said.

the blackness of night was swept away, and all the forest trees turned of a rich, golden green, inexpressibly beautiful.

"We are near the encampment," said Phillip, and a proud smile lighted his face, upon which the sudden radiance shone. "Ride on, dear lady; your halting place of yesterday is but just ahead; that flaming pine-tree will light us to it. This time you will find it filled with warriors."

The horse which Phillip bestrode leaped forward while he was speaking, and with a spirited bound Barbara's white steed sprang after him.

Directly they came in sight of the clearing, illuminated by the burning pine, which, uplifted by a ledge of rocks from a level with the forest, towered behind it like a steeple of quivering fire. Bathed in this golden light Barbara saw the turf mound on which she had taken that noonday repast, and under it the miniature lake with all its crystal waves flame-tinted by the fire. The smoke which fell in a perpetual stream from the smoking pipes seemed eddying and shimmering in the depth of its waters, and the willows which drooped over them were of a rich luminous green that quivered with every stir of the wind.

The larger clearing was less broadly in the light, but that presented one of the grandest scenes that human eye ever dwelt upon. There swarming, justling, heaving together in gorgeous masses, a multitude of savages crowded the open space. Within the glow of that mighty council-fire the scattered tribes of the Pomperun had gathered to meet the son of their slain king. Burning with war paint, and resplendent with barbarous ornaments, they turned the sweet rural scene of the morning into a war-camp so wild and picturesque that the lady uttered a cry of astonishment when she came thus suddenly upon it.

"Do not be afraid," said Phillip, reining in his horse and lending a triumphant look upon his armed guest. "You are safe here. Keep close to my side, and I will show you how hard it is to subjugate a brave people."

Barbara's whole nature was in a scene, so grandly beautiful, the passionate eloquence of her companion's look and voice aroused all the enthusiasm of her nature.

armed, bleeding, desperate, they seized upon him. Warriors, I see by the fire in those eyes and the grip of those hands that no one of you has forgotten that story. The captors of this wretched boy sold him into slavery. They chained his limbs and gave him over to the lash—sent him under the hot sun to work like a beast of burden. He did work and he suffered, but slavery never reached the soul of Metacomb—that forever turned back to his people. Still he must have died like a brute beast, worn out with toil, but for the woman who is yonder with her face turned this way in wonder at what she sees. She came to the island where he toiled under the lash, and saw how wretched he was. With her gold she broke his chain. With her smile she cured his wounded heart. She taught him how to think, and out of that came a power which turned thought into a great purpose which has never left his brain a moment from that day to this.

PREACH THE GOSPEL.

BY JOHN C. HAVEMEYER.

I am persuaded that a great deal of modern preaching is unprofitable and unacceptable to a large class of hearers. I have listened to sermons at a sermon with a heartaching for help to discern God's truth; its power upon my own soul and in my own life more fully, and I fit the house of the Lord unsatisfied and saddened. Feeling that the fault might be my own, I have frequently taken notes, and upon subsequent examination have been compelled to believe that what ever may be my own infirmities, many discourses preached in the name of the Lord are sounds without the voice of Scriptural, saving truth. There is nothing in them to lift the heart out of the world and to make a readiness to stand out and its weakness seem reality, or to stir him to seek and to serve the Lord with all his heart, and to aid him if he has already started. In this sense I find many earnest Christian preachers to come, but their disc-

CHAPTER XXXII.
THE BEACON FIRE.
Barbara rode on her way, altogether unconscious that the woods around her swarmed with armed men, who had been for hours following her at a distance. But all at once another hoof-tread sounded in her path, and looking around she saw young Phillip, mounted on a horse that seemed black in the darkness, riding close by her side, while mighty council-fire the scattered tribe of the Pomperoga had gathered to meet the son of their slain king Burning with war paint, and resplendent with barbarous ornaments, they turned the sweet rural scene of the morning into a war-camp so wild and picturesque that the lady uttered

a cry of astonishment when she came thus suddenly upon it.
'Do not be afraid,' said Phillip, reining in his horse and lending a triumphant look upon his forced guest. 'You are safe here. Keep close to my side, and I will show you how hard it is to subjugate a brave people.'
Barbara drew her rein tight: this scene, so grandly beautiful, the passionate eloquence in her companion's look and voice, aroused all the enthusiasm of her nature.
'Ride on; I will follow!' she said.
With grave dignity, and curbing the heroic fire that burned in his eyes, the young man advanced into the clearing. Barbara followed, threading her way through crowds of armed warriors, some standing in groups, others sitting on the half illuminated sward, while the edges of the forest swarmed with savage forms; for the multitude gathered into that spot had already overrun the open space, and was crowded back into the woods.
Barbara drew up her horse on the margin of the lake, where she sat, like an equestrian statue, under the willows. Phillip rode directly up the mound, and as the hoofs of his horse struck the rock at its summit, called out in a loud, ringing voice that penetrated every nook and corner of the encampment—
'Chief and warriors, Metacomet,
the son of King Phillip, has asked the people of his tribe to come hither that he may hold a talk with them. He is here.'
The young man's face and the figure were thrown into splendid relief by the fire light. His dress savage only when it could be made picturesque, gave kindly dignity to his presence. The eagle's plume, that proclaimed him chief, rose from a cap of crimson cloth, from under which his bright hair swept in curling waves. The horse stood motionless, his neck arched proudly, his wild eyes aglow with animal fire.
While Phillip's voice was yet
vibrating through those savage hearts
a line of warriors, laden down with arms, defiled out of some unseen path of the forest, and belted the mound in with a triple wall of braves which bristled so thickly with pikes and bayonets that the men who bore them were almost invisible.
As the fiery pine flames skyward
and flashed on this bristling steel rank after rank of savages, concealed in the woods, pressed into the light, till the whole clearing was alive with Indians, some armed for the warpath, others bearing calumnets, doubtful if they were summoned from their hiding places in the forest to hold council or sound a war-whoop.
But the whole multitude was ready for either, and a sea of dusky faces was uplifted to the young chief in stern attention.
'If there lives a warrior who knew Phillip when he was king and chief of the Pomperoga, let him step forth look on this face and say if it is not his son who talks with you!'
Thus the young Metacomet addressed the throng of savages as they swarmed in from the forest.
Two old medicine men came out of the ranks and passed through a line of bayonets crowded back to hearers. I have listened to sermon after sermon with a heart aching for help to discern God's truth—its power upon my own soul and in my own life more fully, and left the house of the Lord unsatisfied and saddened.

Fearing that the fault might be my own, I have frequently taken notes,
and upon subsequent examination
have been compelled to believe that whatever may be my own infirmities, many discourses preached in the name of the Lord are sounds without the savor of Scriptural, saving truth.
There is nothing in them to lift the hearer out of the world and to make his sinfulness to stand out and his weakness seem reality, or to stir him to seek and to serve the Lord with all his heart, and to aid him if he has already started. In this sentiment I find many earnest Christian laymen to concur. Indeed, if the whole church were to speak, I believe the large majority would lament the general character of modern pulpit efforts.
An explanation of this condition of things is easily given.
Many ministers have too great a variety of occupation. It is impossible properly to prepare their sermons and attend to the many affairs in which they interest themselves.
They reserve but little time and strength for their sermons, and give us spiritual food altogether inadequate to the needs of our souls.
Their sermons are too abstract and indefinite. They seem not to take into account the audience of tempted, burdened, passion-pressed, immortal and yet dying men and women who hear them. Possibly they consider too much the esthetic side of our nature, and fail to learn by personal contact and Scripture searching what the human heart is and what it needs, and so do not rightly divide the word of truth.
They quote the Scriptures too little. They appear to look from their opinions to the Scriptures, and not in the Scriptures for the truth
they shall declare to the people.
They tell us what they think and not what the Lord says.
There is a great want of wise
courage, so to speak, in the pulpit.
The crying sins of the people are not exposed to them kindly, but how many preachers steadily
train the Gospel guns, as Paul did, against their own and the habitual sins of their congregations?—

$30,000 and $40,000. The operation is certainly a bold one. Five disguised men enter the baggage car, seize, bind and gag the baggage master, and then dispose in like manner of the express agent. Having the car all to themselves now, they deliberately rob the safe, and travel along with the train till a convenient landing place favors
their escape. 'It is the Albany crime over again, save that no attempt is made this time to kill the express agent. If this is Filkin's work, as we think it is, we shall doubtless hear of the repetitions of the crime

brought to a summary tragic end.
WET BOOTS.
What an amount of discomfort wet boots entail, and how well we all recall the painful efforts we have now and then made to draw on a pair of hardbaked ones which were put by the fire overnight to dry!
Once on, they are a sort of modern stocks, destructive of all comfort, and entirely demoralizing to the temper.
The following plan it is said, will do away with this discomfort:
When the boots are taken off fill them quite full with dry oats. This grain has a great fondness for damp, and will rapidly absorb the least vestige of it from the leather. As it quickly and completely takes up the moisture, it swells and fills the boot with a tightly fitting last, keeping its form good, and drying the leather without hardening it. In the morning shake out and hang them in a bag near the fire to dry, ready for the next wet night, draw on the boots, and go happily and comfortably about the day's work.

around her were full of active life. What these signs could be was a wonder to her; neither restless birds nor deer, bounding through the undergrowth in flocks, could produce a noise at once so subdued and persistent. But no harm came, or appeared to threaten her. On the contrary, legions of spirits seemed to guard her path unseen. It was dark before Barbara came out of the thick of the forest, and made her way to the farm house. Up to the very margin of the trees these whispered sounds and almost inaudible footsteps accompanied her. The moment Barbara's feet crossed that threshold hundreds on hundreds of human beings swarmed out of the woods, and moved noiselessly toward Jason Brown's barn.

A crash, as of broken boards, followed by a low, rattling sound, came from the building. Then, as each man filed by the door, a musket was placed in his hand, which he carried straight to the woods, following the warrior who had gone before, as savages tread a war-path. It was the end of this procession that Jason Brown had seen, coiling like a serpent along the edge of the forest after Barbara. Stafford came forth into the moonlight on her white horse and rode away. Of all the arms secreted in the barn, not a gun was left; even the boxes were carried off in fragments.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE BEACON FIRE.

Barbara rode on her way, altogether unconscious that the woods around her swarmed with armed men, who had been for hours following her at a distance. But all at once another hoof-tread sounded in her path, and looking around she saw young Phillip, mounted on a horse that seemed black in the darkness, riding close by her side, while Wahpee lagged behind.

'Do not be afraid; I have been near you all the time,' said the young horseman.

The woods were so dark, except where the light of a clear moon could penetrate to the path she rode over, that Barbara was glad of the addition to her escort. So they rode on together at a quick pace, penetrating more and more deeply into the heart of the wilderness. The hum and rush of what seemed a current of wind in the distance still haunted her way. Sometimes she heard the crackling of underbush, afar off; but these sounds were so continuous that she soon ceased to regard them. Then for a mile or two, all was profound stillness. It seemed as if every living thing had suddenly dropped to sleep upon the earth, and in the leaves. The very moonlight ceased to tremble along the forest turf, for the branches which had sent it quivering like forest work around her path, hung motionless over Barbara's head.

Over the soft turf the three horses sped till the moon went down, and midnight came on. Then, all at once, the woods just ahead of this party burst into a sudden flame; a vivid column of fire shot up to the sky, leaping, hissing, and rioting along the sapless boughs of a dead pine-tree, that crowned an eminence around which their path led. Thus summit, called out in a loud, ringing voice that penetrated every nook and corner of the encampment—

'Chief and warriors, Metacomet, the son of King Phillip, has asked the people of his tribe to come hither that he may hold a talk with them. He is here.'

The young man's face and the figure were thrown into splendid relief by the fire light. His dress savage only where it could be made picturesque, gave him dignity to his presence. The eagle's plume, that proclaimed him chief, rose from a cap of crimson cloth, from under which his bright hair swept in curling waves. The horse stood motionless, his neck arched proudly, his wild eyes aglow with animal fire.

While Phillip's voice was reverberating through those savage hearts a line of warriors, laden down with arms, defiled out of some unseen path of the forest, and belted the mound in with a triple wall of bayonets which bristled so thickly with pikes and bayonets that the men who bore them were almost invisible.

As the fiery pine-flamed skyward and flashed on this bristling steel rank after rank of savages, concealed in the woods, pressed into the light, till the whole clearing was alive with Indians, some armed for the war-path, others bearing calumnets, doubtless they were summoned from their hiding places in the forest to hold council or sound a war-whoop. But the whole multitude was ready for either, and a sea of dusky faces was uplifted to the young chief in stern attention.

'If there lives a warrior who knew Phillip when he was king and chief of the Pomeroags, let him step forth look on this face and say if it is not his son who talks with you?'

Thus the young Metacomet addressed the throng of savages as they swarmed in from the forest.

Two old medicine men came out of the ranks and passed through a line of bayonets crowded back to give them free passages. They went close up to Phillip, and shading their eyes from the hot light, searched his face with keen glances. They fell back satisfied, and, so far as their feeble voices could reach, the savage heard this curt decision.

'His face does not lie.'

Here a low shout, or rather groan of approval, ran through those savage ranks and died away in the forest. Again Metacomet turned to the crowd.

'Warriors, I have come back from across the great waters with the heart of King Phillip beating loud in my bosom. He died fighting for his people. So will I, or set them free, with broader hunting-grounds than they ever trod, and richer corn fields, though they plant them over our father's grave ten thousand years. When he fell, the Pomeroags were a conquered people, not from lack of bravery, but because the whiteman's cunning was more powerful than the strong arms of all our warriors, with the bravest man that ever lived at their head.'

'Warriors, your king, betrayed by a traitor, hunted down like a wild beast, was murdered. His son seized the rifle as it fell from his hand and sent its last bullet through the brain of a white soldier, who attempted to drag him away from his dying father. When he was distemped, burdened, passion-pressed, immortal and yet dying men and women who hear them. Possibly they consider too much the esthetic side of our nature, and fail to learn by personal contact and Scripture searching what the human heart is and what it needs, and so do not rightly divide the word of truth.

They quote the Scriptures too little. They appear to look from their opinions to the Scriptures, and not in the Scriptures for the truth they shall declare to the people. They tell us what they think and not what the Lord says.

There's a great want of wise courage, so to speak, in the pulpit. The crying sins of the people are not exposed to them kindly, but how many preachers steadfastly train the Gospel guns, as Paul did, against their own and the habitual sins of their congregations!—Methodist.

THE SKOOL BOY.

The skool boy is the victim of circumstances.

If he lives in the country he has got to get up early enuff to punch the chickens off from the roost, then start the fire in the kitchen and then go for the cows.

After the cows have been milked, he hurrys down his hash and buck-wheat cakes, and thrashes beans two hours with the old man out in the corn crib.

Now he walks three-miles in a sno path to the distrikt skool hous, and gets there just in time to help split up sum wood for the day's fire.

Skool opens and he takes hiz seat on the flat side of a slab bench, and bends double over a Webster's spelling book, without enny cover.

For variety he stands up in a ro, and speils or scratches a greasy slate with the figgures in a long sum of addishun.

Noon comes at last, and he eats up in one corner hiz two slices of rhi bread and hiz piece ov pi krust, and downs the dri dinner with a pint ov lukewarm water out ov th' pail behind the stove.

The only phun he haz is to slide down hill on a board back of the skool hous, and git licked when he goes home if he happens to wear the sole ov his boots enny, or tare the case ov his britches.

Night cums, and he haz had a day's skooling, and plots bak home to saw wood enuff to last next day before he eats his puddin-and-milk supper and slinks off up into the writuous chamber to bed, without even the ray ov a tallo candle.

This was skool boy life in the country forty years ago.

If the boys now daze had to skool it in this way, they would sue the old man for damages, and enny kind of a jury would bring in a verdik, too, in their favour.

But Daniel Wedster dun it in this way, and becum the most learned statesman we ever raised, and so did Josh Billings, but he didn't never amount to much. Josh Billings never could git the right hang ov a country skool hous; hiz spelling alwus had, and allwuss will have, an impediment in it.—Josh Billings, in N. Y. Weekly.

POOL RAILWAY PORTER.—An

English paper says:—"A remarkable example of presence of mind in a railway porter is afforded by an incident which occurred as the down train from Perth to Aberdeen was leaving Guthrie station. A newsboy who accompanied this train, while in the act of stepping into a carriage missed his footing, and fell down between the platform and the wheels of the carriages. As the train was by this time in motion, any attempt on the part of the boy to get up would have infallibly resulted in his instant death. Nine persons out of ten witnessing this accident would have turned pale, and either shrieked out at the top of their voices advice of various kinds, or remained awe-struck and motionless abiding the issue. Fortunately, however, one of the station porters was master of the moment and of the situation, and rushing forward, lay down on the platform; then, seizing the boy with his hands, held him flat on the ground till all the footboards of the train had passed over him and the danger had ceased. This combination of coolness and common sense is an acquisition that may well be envied by many a person who, notwithstanding all the gifts of an elaborate education, is less fit to battle with difficulties and emergencies of life than the humble station porter at Guthrie, who thus saved the newsboy a horrible death."

the Regular Army, by request of the Governor of Nebraska, has established his headquarters here, and calls on the inhabitants of the State of New York and New Jersey to send him clothing, flour, and other necessities for the starving inhabitants of that State.

AN EDITOR MURDERED.

George Hunter, one of the editors of the Scotsman, was murdered on Saturday evening by unknown persons in Thirteenthstreet, near Fourthave.

A BURGLARY AND INCENDIARISM.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 6.—The store of R. Potter & Son, West Springfield, Penn., was entered by burglars last night. After blowing up the safe, they took from it between $5,000 and $10,000 in money and bonds; and then fired the building, the loss on which and store is $12,000. The stock was insured for $4,000.

THE TILTON CASE.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 7.—The Court of Appeal this morning decided in the case of Theodore Tilton, respondent against H. W. Beecher, appellant, that the order of General Term and of Special Term of the City Court of Brooklyn be reversed, and the cause remitted to the Court below, that his discretion upon the issue may be exercised, without costs either party as against the other. The opinion is written by Justice Rapali, and takes the ground that the Court below has a right to review all of particulars.

RE-KING KALIL—AN APPEAL—REV. J. J. HENNING RE-APPOINTED—AS-SIGNED.

New York, Dec. 8.—Contrary to the general expectation, a jury was readily obtained for the trial of Coroner Crockett under indictment for the murder of Jas. McKenna on election day.

Mayor Vance has been requested by the assistant aldermen to tender the hospitalities of the city to King Kaliluna.

New York, Dec. 8.—G. V. Kicksecker, judge of Probate of Reno County, Kansas, makes an appeal for sufferers in Kansas. He says that near 20,000 persons must depend for subsistence during the winter upon the charity of their fellow men. Of this number the greater are soldiers, who have taken Government land, and are dependent entirely on their crops for living during the winter months. In the fall of August grasshoppers fell on the fields and swept away every trace of vegetation. The Kansas Central Committee, which Judge Kicksecker presides, estimates the cost of feeding the great army of the destitute at more than $1 a month per man, and $480,000 will be required for the next six months. The committee has required as money for the relief of the women and children of the soldiers. Kicksecker can be reached at Broadway, room 16.

John W. C. Gregory, of Jersey City, died this afternoon aged 70. He was first Mayor of Jersey City, and in 1815 was a member of Congress.

City Presbytery published yesterday in the case of the Rev. J. S. Hendenning, acquitting him on the charge of seduction and breach of promise of marriage, but upholding the guilt of ministerial and clerical conduct in making Miss Mary E. Pomeroy presents, visiting her so frequently and at unreasonable hours, and living on such intimate terms with her as to occasion public suspicion of immorality. The Presbytery passed resolutions dissolving pastoral relations between Hendenning and the Pros-lines in Navarre.

GERMANY.

BISMARCK'S REPLY TO WINDHORST.

Berlin, Dec. 6.—Prince Bismarck in the course of his reply to Herr Windhorst in the Reichstag said, "I am in possession of conclusive evidence that the Ecumenical Council was cut short on account of the Franco German war. The Council's vote would have been very different had the French been victorious. I know from the very best sources that Napoleon was dragged into war very much against his will by Jesuitical influences. He strove hard to resist these influences, and at the eleventh hour he determined on peace, and kept his resolution half, but ultimately he was overpowered by persons representing the Vatican."

THE FOURNIER SCANDAL.

(From the Ottawa Free Press.)

We would have wished for the credit of our contemporary, the Citizen, that it had left unsaid what was so very foolishly said in its columns yesterday, in reference to the Hon. Mr Fournier and concerning an injurious slander which has been circulated in the Opposition press in reference to him. We alluded to the matter a few days since and did so regretfully, to give a most explicit denial to this story. The Citizen of last evening comes to the rescue of its confreres who have been engaged in the shameful work of maligning the character of the Minister of Justice, and an article whose length is only proportionate to its imbecility presents an imaginary account of an occurrence which never took place. How the author of the triflingly nonsensical article in yesterday's Citizen acquired the information which he presents to the public with so much sententiousness and appearance of circumstantiality, is a conundrum not very easy of solution. No person connected with the staff of our contemporary was present when the alleged disturbance took place, nor has any one who was present at the time asserted made any statement to any one connected with the Citizen. We do not know whether the irrepressible Jenkins had his ear to the key-hole, whether he fed the waiter, or whether he may not have been secreted under the table when the Minister of Justice took the liberty of taking dinner; but the probability is that some one has been "taking a risk" out of his proclivities for swallowing with too confiding eagerness any suggestion that will furnish pabulum for "the latest Grt outrage." Certain it is, however, that the ingenious little fable, which grumbled the editorial space of the Citizen yesterday does little credit to its originality; if it is a pure invention, and less to its sagacity, if it seriously believes what it affirms. The other day we started:—

"No such occurrence as is attributed to Mr. Fournier took place at all. He had no hand, act, or part in any disturbance whatever at Mr. O'Meara's or elsewhere, and the assertion that he was on a 'six days' spree, or a spree or any other degree of duration, is a simple and preposterous fabrication." In order that there may be no misunderstanding on this understanding on this subject, we repeat what we had said before in reference to this the late Prince Minister of the Dominion is an acquaintance after the fact. He is not to be apprehended, even legally, as having provided a criminal with money, or with an escape from justice; but morally he is still more menacely so, inasmuch as he stayed and paraded in Paris, favoring the arm of the law. In truth it would be impossible to derive a case of complicity after the fact more heinous than that of a Minister of Justice who secretly enters into collusion with a criminal for the purpose of baffling Justice, while he covers the transaction by solemn protests in public of his earnest desire to do his duty. * * * * * The most recalcitrant student, the simplest peasant, guided by the promptings of an honest heart, could scarcely have got into such a mess, in the Riel case, as have men who for their cunning were worshipped by their followers as gods, and the example of whose immoral success was rapidly demoralizing the youth of the country."

The youth of the country, we would add, are by no means the only ones that Sir John's life-long reckless defiance of the simplest rules of public morality has demoralized, for we find on all hands men who thank God that they are not as other men are, pious clergymen, grave professors, stern moralists, winking at his gross immoralities, and gloss them over as "the Yankee vernacular, 'smart,' the only regrettable feature in them being that they were found out."

AN ACCOMMODATING BRIDE.

A happy-go-lucky style of courtship and marriage prevails in the Cherokee nation, if we may receive as a representative report by a Texas paper. A young girl arrived in Denison on the 11th, in response to the invitation of her lover, John Arnold, of the Cherokee nation. The appointment was for the 10th, in Denison, when and where they were to be married. When she arrived she learned that he had expected company, but though somewhat dashed at the turn of affairs, she determined to interview her faithless lover. She found him at his father-in-law's, the father of a fresh bride-groom, the minister having just pronounced the ceremony which gave him a husband. He professed great sorrow at having missed her, but insisted that it was owing to her failure to arrive as agreed. He loved her still, and if she would yet be his he had only to consult with his friends and obtain her permission to give her a marriage annuity. When the proposition was made to her, Mrs. Arnold pondered a moment, and said it might be the minute and the knot the father-in-law said the groom not thirty in the nation, about a minute or two; and Arnold was off to marry his own true love.

EDICTORY.

The undersigned, having made purchase of the DAILY ONTARIO of Belleville for the sum of $15,000, $10,000 of which amount was cash, has made arrangements to move to that town, and has therefore disposed of his entire interest in the WEEKLY EXPRESS. Having been the publisher and manager of this paper, from the beginning of its existence, and having received so much encouragement and patronage from its friends, it is with much regret that he now severs a connection so pleasant to himself.

Having disposed of the entire office and good will of the EXPRESS, to Thos. W. Casey, Esq., of this town, he has great pleasure in recommending him to its former friends, trusting that the new Editor and Publisher will receive the same hearty co-operation and assistance that the undersigned has so long enjoyed.

As Mr. Casey has been a life long resident of the county, and for some years one of the principal editorial contributors to the columns of this paper, he is well known to most of our readers; and it does not, therefore, require any assurance, then his present well sustained character and public reputation, that both the editorial and business control of the paper will be able and honorably conducted.

With the present issue my own connection with the paper ceases, and I leave Mr. Casey to make his bow in his new capacity next week.

All persons desirous of paying their subscriptions and other accounts due me, will be kind enough to call at the office of Robt. Easton, Market Square, who is authorized to give receipts.

Charles Dudley S. Gregory, of Jersey City, died this afternoon, aged 70. He was Mayor of Jersey City and in 1815 was a member of Congress.

WATERTOWN.

THE EXECUTION OF SMITH.

Watertown, Dec. 4.—The execution of Hiram Smith took place to-day. At an early hour people began to flock into town, and at twelve o'clock the crowd around the gallows was immense. Smith slept until six o'clock and ate a hearty breakfast after he awoke, up to which time he was perfectly cool and collected, and did not seem to realize his situation; but he suddenly broke completely down, and prayed piteously calling upon God to witness his innocence. A few moments will probably end the sad scene.

Later.—Shortly after twelve o'clock he was visited by three clergymen and his counsel. He was then conducted to the scaffold, bearing himself boldly and seemed perfectly resigned. He spoke for about twenty minutes. The clock fell at four minutes to one o'clock. His life was extinct in a few seconds. He made no confession. Public opinion is divided as to his guilt.

How the author of the frightfully nonsensical article in yesterday's Citizen acquired the information which he presents to the public with so much sententiousness and appearance of circumstantiality, is a conundrum not very easy of solution. Certain it is, however, that the ingenious little fable which garnished the editorial space of the Citizen yesterday does little credit to its originality. If it is a pure invention, and less to its sagacity, if it seriously believes what it affirms. The other day we started:—

In order that there may be no misunderstanding on this understanding on this subject, we repeat what we had said before in reference to this matter.

The author of "Bacchus in high places," has proved himself, by his own confession, to be a trickster in his compilation of even those statements which he alleges to be "facts." If it is necessary that the private life of a Minister is to be invaded, and his most trivial domestic acts made the subject of the criticism of unscrupulous newspapers, it may not be amiss to call attention to the manner in which those slanders are manipulated. The Citizen devotes two columns to prove true the scandalous and wicked reports in other Tory prints in reference to Mr. Fournier. After going carefully over the whole article, we find that eliminating the abuse, declamation and insults from the article, the whole case, as it presents it, is as follows. We quote its own language:—

"Last week the Minister of Justice with a legal friend of his, visited Mr. O'Meara's restaurant on George street * * * in the evening. The first-named gentleman complained of not feeling well and * * * tested the medicinal effects of Moselle. * * * On the arrival of Mr. Frochette, members for Levis (and some other gentlemen) it was necessary to complete the * * * social circle. * * * The contents of five bottles * * * disappeared, and according to the company (five persons) was

SCRUPULOUS HIGHWAY MEN.

A stage coach was stopped by highwaymen a couple of weeks ago in Northern Texas. While "going through" the passengers, several of whom were ladies, and one a preacher, they protested that they were "gentlemen," and did not intend to molest any of their victims who make an "honest living." Under this heading the preacher, the ladies and the driver were classified, and escaped being plundered. So punctiliously scrupulous were they in their vocation, that they refrained from swearing while pursuing it. They were lucky in gathering a rich spoil. That feature of the affair which is particularly worthy of notice is a letter written by the minister describing the robbery. It concludes in this way: "They were so polite towards me that perhaps I should say no more. Really I did not know but that they would request me to pray for them; and if I only had my wits about me, I should have asked them for a contribution for Indian missions, as our cause is suffering immensely for lack of funds just at this time, and I am sure they have more greenbacks on hand than they can use with convenience. Should they see this, and I know they read the papers, they will favor me greatly (as one good turn deserves another) by forwarding to my address a hundred or more dollars for the cause of Indian evangelization.—Virginia City Enterprise.

The demand for workmen of all kinds—skilled and ordinary—is quite equal to the supply, and as a consequence we anticipate a decreased expenditure in charitable funds during the cold season. This, of course, applies to our own local wants. The unsettled state of the financial and commercial circles in the United States, and the consequent depression of almost all kinds of industry, have forced a large number of persons to cross the lines in search of employment. We presume that the major part of the applications for assistance already made to the donating societies and police authorities of this and other Canadian cities and towns, come from a class of nomadic unfortunate hailing from the neighboring States. Comparatively few citizens of this country, possessed of the least self-respect and in possession of ordinary health, need seek long for steady work, wherewith to provide means of subsistence and even comfort.

What we purposed calling the attention of the laboring classes to is this: When "business is brisk," to use a common expression, and every day brings in its additional resources, the future is not sufficiently calculated as an important consideration in our

ANNA MURDER—KING KAL-
AN APPEAL—REV. J. I.
RE-APPOINTED—AR-
BONDED.

New York, Dec. 8.—Contrary to the general expectation, a jury was readily obtained for the trial of Coroner Crockett under indictment for the murder of Mrs. McKenna on election day.

Mayor Vance has been requested by the assistant aldermen to tender the hospitality of the city to King Kalakama.

New York, Dec.—G. V. Kicksecker, judge of Probate of Reno County, Kansas, makes an appeal for sufferers in Kansas. He says that near 20,000 persons must depend for subsistence during the winter upon the charity of their fellow men. Of this number three-quarters are soldiers, who have taken Government land, and are dependent entirely on their crops for living during the winter months. In July and August grasshoppers fall in millions and sweep away every trace of vegetation. The Kansas Committee estimates the cost of feeding the great army of the destitute at $4 a month per man, $2480,000 will be required for the next six months. The money must be paid for food and clothing for women and children. Kicksecker can be reached at Broadway, room 16.

Charles Dudley S. Gregory, of Jersey City, died this afternoon, aged 75. He was first Mayor of Jersey City, and in 1815 was a member of Congress.

The City Presbytery published a resolution today in the case of the Rev. John S. Gendemann, acquitting him on the charge of seduction and breach of promise of marriage, but finding him guilty of unministerial and unchristian conduct in making Miss Mary E. Fournier presents, visiting her so frequently and at unreasonable hours, and living on such intimate terms with her as to occasion public suspicion of impropriety. The Presbytery passed resolutions dissolving pastoral relations between Gendemann and the Prospect Avenue Church in view of the disturbing influences incident to the case.

Edward Smart, formerly of Liverpool, but recently from New Orleans, bought in this market a few days ago, a bale of the Cotton Exchange, some 400 bales of cotton, and shipped the same to Liverpool. He sold the bills of lading to Duncan, Sherman & Co., receiving therefor a bill of exchange, and has absconded.

WATERTOWN.

THE EXECUTION OF SMITH.

Watertown, Dec. 4.—The execution of Hiram Smith took place to-day. At an early hour people began to flock into town, and at twelve o'clock the crowd around the gallows was immense. Smith slept until six o'clock and ate a hearty breakfast after he awoke, up to which time he was perfectly cool and collected, and did not seem to realize his situation; but he suddenly broke completely down, and prayed piteously calling upon God to witness his innocence. A few moments will probably end the sad scene.

Later.—Shortly after twelve o'clock he was visited by three clergymen and his counsel. He was then conducted to the scaffold, bearing himself boldly and seemed perfectly resigned. He spoke for about twenty minutes. The clock fell at four minutes to one o'clock. His life was extinct in a few seconds. He made no confession. Public opinion is divided as to his guilt.

engaged in the shameful work of maligning the character of the Minister of Justice, and an article whose length is only proportionate to its imbecility presents an imaginary account of an occurrence which never took place. How the author of the frightfully nonsensical article in yesterday's Citizen acquired the information which he presents to the public with so much sententiousness and appearance of circumstantiality, is a conundrum not very easy of solution. No person connected with the staff of our contemporary was present when the alleged disturbance took place, nor has any one who was present at the time asserted made any statement to any one connected with the Citizen. We do not know whether the irrepressible Jenkins had his ear to the key-hole, whether he feed the waiter, or whether he may not have been secreted under the table when the Minister of Justice took the liberty of taking dinner; but the probability is that some one has been "taking a rise" out of his proclivities for swallowing with too confiding eagerness any suggestion that will furnish pabulum for the latest Grit outrage. Certain it is, however, that the ingenious little fable which garnished the editorial space of the Citizen yesterday does little credit to its originality. If it is a pure invention, and less to its sagacity, if it seriously believes what it affirms. The other day we started:—

'No such occurrence as is attributed to Mr. Fournier took place at all. He had no hand, act, or part in any disturbance whatever at Mr. O'Meara's or elsewhere, and the assertion that he was on a 'sixdays' spree, or a spree or any other degree of duration, is a simple and preposterous fabrication.'

In order that there may be no misunderstanding on this understanding on this subject, we repeat what we had said before in reference to this matter.

The author of "Bacchus in high places," has proved himself, by his own confession, to be a trickster in his compilation of even those statements which he alleges to be "facts." If it is necessary that the private life of a Minister is to be invaded, and his most trivial domestic acts made the subject of the criticism of unscrupulous newspapers, it may not be amiss to call attention to the manner in which those slanders are manipulated. The Citizen devotes two columns to prove true the scandalous and wicked reports in other Tory prints in reference to Mr. Fournier. After going carefully over the whole article, we find that eliminating the abuse, declamation and insults from the article, the whole case, as it presents it, is as follows. We quote its own language:—

'Last week the Minister of Justice with a legal friend of his, visited Mr. O'Meara's restaurant on George street * * * in the evening. The first-named gentleman complained of not feeling well and * * * tested the medicinal effects of Moselle. * * * On the arrival of Mr. Frechette, members for Levis (and some other gentlemen) it was necessary to complete the * * * social circle. * * * The contents of five bottles * * * disappeared, and according to the * * * company (five persons) was

AN ACCOMMODATING BRIDE.

A happy-go-lucky style of courtship and marriage prevails in the Cherokee nation, if we may receive as a representative report by a Texas paper. A young girl arrived in Denton on the 11th, in response to the invitation of her lover, John Arnold, of the Cherokee nation. The appointment was for the 10th, says Denton, when and where they were to be married. When she arrived she learned that he had espoused another, but though somewhat dashed at the turn of affairs, she determined to interview her faithless lover. She found him at his father-in-law's, the father of a fresh bride-groom, the minister having just pronounced the ceremony which made him a husband. He professed great sorrow at having misled her, but pleaded that it was owing to her failure to arrive as agreed. His lover, he said, and if she would sit back and wait only to consult with his friends and obtain her permission to have the marriage annulled. When the proposition was made to him, Mrs. Arnold pondered a moment, and said it might go; the minister, who did not know the father-in-law, said the groom not rarely in the nation more than a minute or two; and Arnold was off to marry his own true love.

SCRUPULOUS HIGHWAYMEN.

A stage coach was stopped by highwaymen a couple of weeks ago in Northern Texas. While "going through" the passengers, several of whom were ladies, and one a preacher, they protested that they were "gentlemen," and did not intend to molest any of their victims who make an "honest living." Under this heading the preacher, the ladies and the driver were classified, and escaped being plundered. So punctiliously scrupulous were they in their vocation, that they refrained from swearing while passing it. They were lucky in gathering a rich spoil. That feature of the affair which is particularly worthy of notice is a letter written by the minister describing the robbery. It concludes in this way: "They were so polite towards me that perhaps I should say no more. Really I did not know but that they would request me to pray for them; and if I only had my wits about me, I should have asked them for a contribution for Indian missions, as our cause is suffering immensely for lack of funds just at this time, and I am sure they have more greenbacks on hand than they can use with convenience. Should they see this, and I know they read the papers, they will favor me greatly (as one good turn deserves another) by forwarding to my address a hundred or more dollars for the cause of Indian evangelization.—Virginia City Enterprise.

With the present issue my own connection with the paper ceases, and I leave Mr. Casey to make his bow in his new capacity next week.

OUR WINTER OUTLOOK.

In the midst of general prosperity we are apt to forget some of the minor responsibilities which our social condition entails. Because the season immediately pressure upon our charity, and the signs are encouraging in a local aspect, we should not be too indifferent to the clearly defined rules of Dr. and Cr. Perhaps not for many years have the winter prospects been more cheering in Canada, and especially in Napanee and vicinity than they are at present. An unusually abundant harvest, healthy financial circulation and animated labor market, make our outlook very pleasant, and strip the long winter months of their dreaded severity. All persons inclined to earn honest and industrious livelihood can find remunerative labor. The demand for workmen of all kinds—skilled and ordinary—is quite equal to the supply, and as a consequence we anticipate a decreased expenditure in charitable funds during the cold season. THE EXECUTION OF SMITH.

Watertown, Dec. 4.—The execution of William Smith took place to-day. At nearly four o'clock people began to flock into town, and at twelve o'clock the crowd around the gall was immense. COOL RAILWAY PORTER.—An English paper says:—"A remarkable example of presence of mind in a railway porter is afforded by an incident which occurred as the down train from Perth to Aberdeen was leaving Guthrie station. A newsboy who accompanied this train, while in the act of stepping into a carriage missed his footing, and fell down between the platform and the wheels of the carriages. As the train was by this time in motion, any attempt on the part of the boy to get up would have infallibly resulted in his instant death. Nine persons out of ten witnessing this accident would have turned pale, and either shrieked out at the top of their voices advice of various kinds, or remained awe-struck and motionless abiding the issue. Fortunately, however, one of the station porters was master of the moment and of the situation, and rushing forward, lay down on the platform; then, seizing the boy with his hands, held him flat on the ground till all the foot-boards of the train had passed over him and the danger had ceased. This combination of coolness and common sense is an acquisition that may well be envied by many a person who, notwithstanding all the gifts of an elaborate education, is less fit to battle with difficulties and emergencies of life than the humble station porter at Guthrie, who thus saved the newsboy a horrible death."

the domestic expenses. There is so much to tempt an inordinate desire for what could be reasonably dispensed with, and the conscious possession of ready means to back up the inclination, too many are prone to indulge beyond a limit of safety, and suffer afterwards as a consequence. A careful estimate of present and prospective resources, and an intelligent use of the favors now enjoyed, will give our mechanics and artisans an opportunity to put a decided advantage on their side of the Ledger. Let no spasmodic ambition tempt to unwise investments; but rather let a judicious system of economy rule throughout, and the result cannot be doubted. There are indications of increasing activity in nearly every branch of business, and by properly ordering the necessary expenses of a household the most common laboring man cut put by something for "a rainy day," as the old hands term it. And then, what can be more desirable to any man than to become the owner of a home of his own—a house and lot, however humble in appearance, over which he may exercise sovereign control, and which give him an interest in the welfare of the whole city never realized before. Nowhere else can the facilities for obtaining this sense of citizenship be more encouraging than here in Napanee. Lots are offered on reasonable terms, labor is at a premium and living is remarkably cheap. We appeal to the parties whom this more direct concerns, to take the subject into careful consideration, now and during the long winter evenings, and firmly resolve to make a beginning in life of a substantial and manly nature.

ANOTHER FIRE COMPANY.—At last the Town Council have awakened to the necessity of having an organized company of fire-men to manage the old hand-engine, and at their meeting on Monday evening last resolved to give that engine to a company of young men to be approved of by themselves. Although an application was made to them some time since by a number of young men who were willing to organize, they would not let them have the engine, but the fire of Saturday night has stirred them up. There has been a "shaking of the dry bones."

A SAD SAD CASE.—The dwelling house of Duncan McDonald, blacksmith, at Martintown, was burned down Saturday at midnight and his little daughter five years of age perished. The fire was caused by the upsetting of a coal oil lamp. The father jumped from an upper window after rescuing another child, and was so badly burned, that he is not expected to recover. The mother was also burned severely. The house and its contents, including money was totally destroyed, and the family who, were in comfortable circumstances, are left penniless.—Conwall Gazette.

IN HUMANITY.—The New York papers tell a horrible story of a young Irish girl committed by the board of health inspectors to Blackwell's Island small-pox hospital because she had the feverish eruption known as hives upon her; consigned there in spite of her protestation to small-pox beds; forcing her way out of these wards to a fever hospital, there attended by a badly creature sentenced for the 41st time, and at last outraged by a fellow employed as an orderly. And this is a Christian country in the nineteenth century!

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.—As was expected, quite a treat was enjoyed by those who attended the concert of the Jubilee Singers on Monday evening last. The audience was composed principally of the elite of the town, whose rapturous and frequent applause showed how they enjoyed themselves. The company consists of five ladies and three gentlemen, all colored. The programme was com-

It is expected that one will be held to fill the place vacated by councillor John White, who has removed to California and that the other members of the present council (if they can be induced to) will resume their seats for 1875. The position of councillor in this village, is not considered of much importance of late years, and consequently is not much sought after. It was with great difficulty that a person was found to act as reeve at our last election. We have plenty of men capable of filling these positions, but who, when asked to come forward and represent us, decline the honor, and the consequence is, that owing to want of energy on the part of these wise heads, there is nothing going on at present in the council but the clerks pay. He sits up with the councillors at their meetings, and not only draws the minutes of each session, but coolly draws pay for the same, while they get nothing. If it is right for the clerk, a citizen of the same place, and equally interested in the prosperity of the municipality, to receive pay for his services, it is equally just and right, that the councillors should receive compensation for theirs, and it is to be hoped that the first act of the incoming council will be to vote themselves a salary for their valuable services,

The New York Republic says: "Emigration from Germany is, we are told, likely to receive a considerable impetus from the recent regulations about the Landstrum, or the levee en masse on all males. Forced military service is always distasteful, and the thrifty Germans evidently prefer removing to where peace and plenty reign, even from the beloved Fatherland, where wars and rumors of wars are always threatening them. Two years ago very stringent measures were enforced to hinder emigration, and several of the steamship lines suffered materially from this cause. That Bismark will not permit the 'bone and sinew' to shirk their duty of following the drum and becoming food for powder is scarcely to be expected. ELECTRICITY! THOMAS' ELECTRIC OIL!—WORTH TEN TIMES ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD.—Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is the cheapest medicine ever made. One dose cures common sore throat. One bottle has cured bronchitis. Fifty cents' worth has cured an old-standing cough. It positively cures Catarrh, Asthma and Croup. Fifty cents' worth has cured crick in the back, and the same quantity lame back of eight years' standing. The following are extracts from a few of the many letters that have been received from different parts of Canada, which, we think, should be sufficient to satisfy the most skeptical. Collard, of Sparta, Ont., writes, "and me 6 does. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, have sold all I had from you and want more now; its cures are truly wonderful." Wm Maguire, of Franklin, writes, "I have used all the agent left, it acts like a charm. It is slow at first but takes splendidly." J. Cole, of Iowa, writes, "I have bought a dozen Thomas' Electric Oil. I am nearly out; nothing equals it. It is highly recommended by those who have used it." J. Bedford, Thamesville, writes, "Send at once a further supply of Electric Oil. I have only one bottle left. I never saw anything sell so well and at such general satisfaction." J. Thompson, Woodford, writes, "Send me some more Electric Oil. I have sold entirely out. Nothing takes like it." Miller and Ross, Ulverton, P. Q., writes, "The Electric Oil is getting a great reputation here and is daily called for. Send us a further supply without delay." Lemoyne, Ont., and Co., Buckingham, P. Q., writes, "Send us one gross Electric Oil. We find it to take well."

SOCIAL.—A social will be held in the Canada Presbyterian Church this evening, when an address will be delivered by the Rev Mr. Scott on the "Crying out of the Rocks."

I would announce to my numerous patrons that I will be off and on in Napanee for a month or more, for the settlement of accounts.

T. S. CARMAN.

FIRST OF THE SEASON.—The reunions established by the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Mary Magdalene's Church last year, will be again renewed this, the first one of which will be held on Thursday evening next.

SELBY AGAIN.—The ladies of the M. E. Church Selby, intend holding a Neck-tie Social in the Town Hall, on Thursday the 11th inst., at 7 o'clock, p. m., A cordial invitation is given to all.

ERNSTOWN ELECTIONS.—At a meeting of the Electors of Ernestown held at Victoria School House on the 7th inst., L. O. Spafford, Esq., was chosen as the candidate for Mayor, and J. M. Parrott C. W. Huffman, Esq's. as Depy. Reeves.

THAT DEBATE.—On account of the deficiency of snow, and the probable defeat of the Ontario Government in the coming contest, this society has seen fit to postpone their debate on "Universal Suffrage" until the 13th January 1876.

THE STRANDED VESSELS.—The steamers Chieftain and Hiram A. Calvin, after taking the schooner Babineau & Gendry off the Amherst Island shore safely, are trying their fortune with the schooner Star, at the Ducks.

SCIENTIFIC LECTURE.—We beg to call attention to the notice of a 'second lecture,' to be delivered by Rev. Mr. Steele, on a topic of all-engrossing interest at the present time. The public are invited to the Town Hall on Thursday evening 17th instant, at 8 o'clock.

THE STEAM ENGINE.—We refer our readers to the proceedings of the Town Council in another column for Mr. Mair's report on the cause of the steamer working, so badly at the fire at Gibbard & Sons on Saturday evening last. The engine has been overhauled during the week, and Mr. Mair, after testing her, now reports her in good working order.

PATRONAGE.—The several Temperance organizations of the Dominion are going to ask His Excellency, Lord Dufferin, to become their patron, on the strength of the idea, now generally accepted that he is not only a temperance man himself, but a warm advocate of the cause.

XMAS ADVERTISING.—The approach of the holidays is stirring the merchants up to the wisdom of advertising their wares. If they are desirous of letting the people know what they have got for sale, advertising is a necessity. Those who do judicious advertising are unquestionably the most successful in business.

READINGS FOR THE POOR.—We are requested to announce that an entertainment consisting of readings, recitations, songs and music, will be given at the Town Hall, Napanee, on Wednesday evening, 23rd inst., the proceeds to be devoted to a dinner for the poor. The entertainment will be under the management of the Mayor, and a committee of citizens.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.—The anniversary services of the M. E. Church will be held on Sunday, 20th inst., when three sermons will be preached, as follows: At 10¹/₂ a. m. by Bishop Carman; at 3 p. m. by Rev. S. G. Stone, and at 6 p. m. by Rev. East-

Irish girl committed by the beard of health inspectors to Blackwell's Island small-pox hospital, because she had the feverish eruption known as hives upon her; consigned there in spite of her protestation to small-pox beds; forcing her way out of these wards to a fever hospital, there attended by a beautiful creature sentenced for the 41st time, and at last outraged by a fellow employed as an orderly. And this is a Christian country in the nineteenth century!

THE JUBILEE SINGERS.—As was expected, quite a treat was enjoyed by those who attended the concert of the Jubilee Singers on Monday evening last. The audience was composed principally of the elite of the town, whose sympathetic and frequent applause showed how they enjoyed themselves. The company consists of five ladies and three gentlemen, all colored. The programme was composed of comp-meeting hymns, serio-comic and sentimental pieces. The solos were nearly all performed by Miss Ida Davis, a lady who possesses a voice of rare sweetness, and over which she has perfect control. Her sentimental song of "Sweet Spirit Hear My Prayer," was especially good. Miss Mount, who took part in one or two duets, has a very powerful soprano voice, well cultivated. The band was led by Mr. Robert Parkman, who has one of the most powerful bass voices we have ever heard. Altogether about two hours time was very pleasantly spent.

THE SHANNONVILLE ACCIDENT.—A telegram gives the following particulars of the Shannonville accident:—"On Friday evening a man named Thos. Smart, an Indian, from the Mohawk tract, was run over by the Grand Trunk cars, half a mile west of Tyendinaga station, and mangled and cut to pieces in a shocking manner. He had been engaged at some of the neighbors during the day killing hogs, and got intoxicated on his way home. It is supposed he lay down on the track and fell asleep. The remains were found yesterday morning by the section men, and put on the lorry, and taken to Tyendinaga station, where an inquest was held. A verdict of "Death by being run over by the Grand Trunk cars while under the influence of liquor" was returned. Deceased was about forty years of age.

ARISING FROM THE ASHES.—Scarcely had the ashes of their demolished shop grown cold, before Messrs Gibbard and Son set to work to have the debris cleared away in order to at once commence work on a new building. It was a lively scene on Monday morning last to see their entire force of workmen,—book-keepers, fitters, cabinet-makers, chair-makers, and painters, all working with a will to accomplish an end so desirable to themselves and to the town as well. Already the masons are pretty well along with the foundation, and in a very short time the old shop will be replaced by a much larger and better one. In the meantime, all the men have been put to work, and those who are not engaged in the construction of the new workshop are at work for Messrs. Gibbard in Mr. Herring's foundry, that gentleman having kindly made room for a number of workmen. Although their insurance will not cover over one half their loss they are not going to bury their heads in the ashes, but will arise triumphant over the flames. Success to them, say we.

ruined building was got out before much damage had been done to it.

The Messrs. Gibbard's loss is about $5,000 on which there is an insurance of $2500.

BATH CORRESPONDENT.

Tempore Mutatur. In the early days of Phrenology, it was quite fashionable for men to have their heads felt; now, every lady in the land must have their "Scott Crown Felt."

The EXPRESS, is always a welcome visitor to the people of Bath and vicinity, giving, as it does, the local news of the County. The authorities here consider it the leading paper in the County.

The quantity of Barley shipped from this port this fall is estimated at 5,000 bushels.

Business of all kind has been good, and as all classes of people have come forward and paid their accounts, the merchants' prophecy of a famine in court matters.

The municipal council of Bath, at their last sitting passed a by-law appropriating their share of the municipal loan fund grant, toward paying for the school house erected here some two years ago.

Every person here is quiet in reference to the forthcoming municipal election. It is expected that one will be held to fill the place vacated by councillor John White, who has removed to California and that the other members of the present council (if they can be induced to) will resume their seats for 1875. The position of councillor in this village, is not considered of much importance of late years, and consequently is not much sought after. It was with great difficulty that a person was found to act as reeve at our last election. We have plenty of men capable of filling these positions, but who, when asked to come forward and represent us, decline the honor, and the consequence is, that owing to want of energy on the part of these wise heads, there is nothing going on at present in the council but the clerks pay. He sits up with the councillors at their meetings, and not only draws the minutes of each session, but coolly draws pay for the same, while they get nothing. If it is right for the clerk, a citizen of the same place, and equally interested in the prosperity of the municipality, to receive pay for his services, it is equally just and right, that the councillors should receive compensation for theirs, and it is to be hoped that the first act of the incoming council will be to vote themselves a salary, for their valuable services.

THE MODEL FARM COMMITTEE.

Toronto, Dec. 4.—The Model Farm Committee met this morning at 10:30 and Bethune was appointed chairman. Hon. Cameron and Hon. McKeller prepared to draw up the list of witnesses required. M. C. Candless is to be notified to attend. The next meeting of the committee met this morning at 10. W. S. Law of Tilsonburg, came down about the Tilsonburg bill, and found that Rykert was in favor of the bill. Henry M. Gillies, Secretary of the Niagara District Insurance Co., said that he had searched the books of the County thoroughly and didn't find and payments made to Rykert

As Mr. Casey has been a life long resident of the county, and for some years one of the principal editorial contributors in the columns of this paper, it is well known to most of our readers, and it does not, therefore, require any assurance, that his present well sustained character and public reputation, that both the editorial and literary control of the paper will be his, and will be ably and ably conducted.

In the present issue my own connection with the paper ceases, and I leave Mr. Casey to make his bow in this new capacity next week.

All persons desirous of paying their subscriptions and other accounts due me, will be kind enough to call at the office of Robt. Eas on Market Square, who is authorized to give receipts.

OUR WINTER OUTLOOK.

In the midst of general prosperity it is easy to forget some of the heavier responsibilities which our position entails. Because of the immediate pressure upon us, and the signs are everywhere, we should be different to the clearly not for years have the winter prospects more cheering in Canada, especially in Nanapsee and where they are at present.

An unusually abundant harvest, healthy circulation and animated life in the market, make our outlook very pleasant, and strip the long winter months of their dreaded gloom. All persons inclined to earn money in industrious livelihood cannot but remunerative labor. The demand for workmen of all kinds—skilled and ordinary—is quite equal to the supply, and as a consequence we anticipate a decreased expenditure in charitable funds during the cold season. This, of course, applies to our own local wants. The unsettled state of the financial and commercial circles in the United States, and the consequent depression of almost all kinds of industry, have forced a large number of persons to cross the lines in search of employment. We presume that the major part of the applications for assistance already made to the donating societies and police authorities of this and other Canadian cities and towns, come from a class of nomadic unfortunate, failing from the neighboring States. Comparatively few citizens of this country, possessed of the least self respect and in possession of ordinary health, need seek long for steady work, wherewith to provide means of subsistence and even comfort.

What we purposed calling the attention of the laboring classes to is this: When "business is brisk," to use a common expression, and every day brings in its additional resource, the future is not sufficiently calculated as an important consideration in

SCIENTIFIC LECTURE.—We beg to call attention to the notice of a "second lecture," to be delivered by Rev. Mr. Steele, on a topic of all-engrossing interest at the present time. The public are invited to the Town Hall on Thursday evening 17th inst., at 8 o'clock.

Collections at each service in aid of building fund. Tea-Meeting on Tuesday evening in the basement of the church.

ADDRESS BY GOLDWIN SMITH.—We have received from the publisher a copy of an address delivered by Goldwin Smith at the dinner of the "National Club" held at Toronto on the 8th October last. From what we have read of it, it is indeed a master speech, full of loyalty and patriotism to our beloved country. Although an Englishman by birth, and but a short time a resident of Canada, there are few men amongst us take a greater interest in our welfare than he.

PRENTICE BOYS.—A new lodge of the above order was formed in Queensboro in the County of North Hastings a few days since, the following being a list of the officers:—

The Street Committee submitted their 16th pay list, amounting to $45, ordered to be paid.

Mr. G. L. Mair, the engineer was requested to address the council, and state the reasons that prevented the steam fire engine from working at the late fire. He stated that after making a careful investigation of the engine, he gave it as his opinion that the trouble was owing to the natural wear and tear of the valve spindles, and the sudden starting of the engine caused the discharge valves to be thrown out of their places. He stated this was purely accidental, and might occur at any time.

Moved by Mr. Boyes, seconded by Mr. Ross, that the Mayor and Reeve be added to the committee on fire water etc., for the purpose of engaging another engineer to reside on the premises.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. James, seconded by Mr. Lane, that the committee on fire, water etc., be instructed to hand over the hand engine to a company of young men, when formed, and approved of by the Council.—Carried.

Councillor Lane introduced a by-law for the appointment of returning officers, for holding the ensuing municipal elections, and fixing the places for holding the same, which was read a first time and referred to a committee of the whole. DISASTROUS FIRE.

GIBBARD AND SON'S CABINET FACTORY DESTROYED.

The old adage that misfortunes never come single-handed has been again illustrated in this town,—this time by a fire more disastrous than the one of a few weeks since. Although the sum total of the loss may not be as great, it will be more felt, as more persons were interested in it.

Shortly after six o'clock on Saturday evening the alarm of fire was sounded, and soon after a lurid glare was observed in the atmosphere in the east end of the town, which proved to be the Cabinet Factory of Messrs. Gibbard & Son, where but a short time previous the sound of busy workmen might be heard; as some 30 or 40 men were employed. Before either of the engines arrived on the spot a large number of persons were engaged in trying to stay the fire, by throwing water on the flames, but all their efforts were fruitless, as the flames seemed to gain more rapidly on them.

When the engines arrived on the ground, and steam had been got up on steamer, it was found she would not work, and then the hand-engine was resorted to, but as the suction pipe would not operate on her, an army of workers at once spread themselves out, and by passing the water from hand to hand, succeeded in getting a stream on the fire, and perhaps saved the adjoining buildings of Messrs. Green and Son and John Herring, but did not accomplish anything in the way of saving the cabinet factory, as that was entirely demolished.

Great praise is certainly due to the hosts of persons of all classes who labored so assiduously to get the mastery of the flames.

Very fortunately, however, some of the most valuable machinery in the ruined building was got out before much damage had been done to it.

The Messrs. Gibbard's loss is about $5,000 on which there is an insurance of $2500.

The position of councillor in this village, is not considered of much importance of late years, and consequently is not much sought after. It was with great difficulty that a person was found to act as reeve at our last election. $50 Reward Offered

For any Washing Machine in the Dominion to equal the

DEWITT PATENT

STAR WASHER

A few Reasons why this is Superior to all other Machines.

1st. It will do any ordinary washing in one hour. 2nd. It saves all the time and expense required by all wooden washers, or hand rubbing as it washes and boils at the same time. 3rd. It will wash the most delicate of lace, fine fabrics of any material, Prints, Woolen Goods, without the slightest wear or injury to the clothes. 4th. It will wash bed quilts in the neatest possible manner without bunching the Cotton. 5th. There are no acids or injurious mixtures used with this machine to rot or discolor the clothes. But on the contrary they remain clean and brilliant and do not require bleaching. 6th. It saves in a short time the wear and tear of clothes, fuel, soap and labor sufficient to pay for itself. 7th. It makes no noise in the room and therefore can be used in the Drawing Room or Kitchen. 8th. And best of all reasons it does not wear the lig and patience out of the women on washing days, for a child can use this washer. The work is soon done without mess or trouble, and the ladies remain cheerful and pleasant, with a smile to greet everyone.

DEWITT & CO.

Agent at Napanee—GEORGE CONWAY; 5 ELDDN STORMS, Embertown.

This is to certify that Mr. George Conway has washed for us with the "Star Washer," which has given entire satisfaction, doing the washing much better, quicker and easier, than any machine we have ever tried.

We would respectfully recommend it to all persons wishing a Washing Machine of any kind, as the clothes require no rubbing in the board and will wash woolen goods as well as cotton.

Barnum never publishes a full-length portrait because he wishes it to be understood that he is always a head.

The Pope has rechristened Prof. Tyndall. "Spirit Pirate" is the name he lavishes upon the man of science.

Advices from Cairo deny that the Port of Berbera, on the Gulf of Aden, was blockaded by Egyptian men-of-war.

It is reported that the difference between British Columbia and the Dominion has been arranged through Mr. Walker's visit to England.

Brigham Young's poor health is thus pleasantly alluded to by the Salt Lake Tribune: "Age and disease, aggravated by the reflections of an illspent life have notified this bad old man that his sands have run the course of wisdom."

The New York Republic says: "Emigration from Germany is, we are told, likely to receive a considerable impetus from the recent regulations about the Landstrum, or the levee en masse on all males. Forced military service is always distasteful, and the thrifty Germans evidently prefer removing to where peace and plenty reign, even from the beloved Fatherland, where wars and rumors of wars are always threatening them. Two years ago very stringent measures were enforced to hinder emigration, and several of the steamship lines suffered materially from this cause. That Bismark will not permit the 'bone and sinew' to shirk their duty of following the drum and becoming food for powder is scarcely to be expected. With France a mouldering volcano, Denmark outraged, Austria and Hungary with ranking memories of Sadowa, and Russia jealous and very formidable, we are inclined to think that the quiet emigrants will not be readily suffered to depart."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

There is nothing that can contribute so much to render the horse beautiful and elegant, to improve his condition and make him all that is desirable, as "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy," it has been used by many persons who own valuable carriage and other horses with decided success, and so well pleased are they with it that they always keep it on hand in case of emergency; it may be given at all times with perfect safety.—Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. After war, pestilence and intemperance—colds lead to the greatest destruction of human life, mainly, because it is considered by many to be of no consequence and hence systematically neglected, until a simple, curable disease, is converted into a fatal pulmonary one. Every one troubled with what is called a slight cold or cough, should immediately use "Bryan's Pulmonic Waters"—they allay irritation at once, and exert a most beneficial influence on all the Bronchial and pulmonary organs. Sold by all Druggists and country dealers. Price 25 cts per box.

that the other members of the present council (if they can be induced to) will resume their seats for 1875. The position of councillor in this village, is not considered of much importance of late years, and consequently is not much sought after. It was with great difficulty that a person was found to act as reeve at our last election. We have plenty of men capable of filling these positions, but who, when asked to come forward and represent us, decline the honor, and the consequence is, that owing to want of energy on the part of these wise heads, there is nothing going on at present in the council but the clerks pay. He sits up with the councillors at their meetings, and not only draws the minutes of each session, but coolly draws pay for the same, while they get nothing. If it is right for the clerk, a citizen of the same place, and equally interested in the prosperity of the municipality, to receive pay for his services, it is equally just and right, that the councillors should receive compensation for theirs, and it is to be hoped that the first act of the incoming council will be to vote themselves a salary for their valuable services.

THE MODEL FARM COMMITTEE.

Toronto, Dec. 4.—The Model Farm Committee met this morning at 10:30 and Bethune was appointed chairman. Hon. Cameron and Hon. McKeller prepared to draw up the list of witnesses required. M. C. Candles is to be notified to attend. The next meeting of the committee met this morning at 10. W. S. Law, of Tilsonburg, came down about the Tilsonburg bill, and found that Rykert was in favor of the bill. Henry M. Gillies, Secretary of the Niagara District Insurance Co., said that he had searched the books of the County thoroughly and didn't find any payments made to Rykert for any parliamentary work. A. J. Cattanch said that Kingsmill and himself were retained by Tilson to get the bill through the firm of Crooks, Kingsmill & Cattanch; did not engage Kingsmill and Cattanch, and Francis did the business. Geo. Kelly was recalled; he said that Tilson remarked to Rykert that he would give him $100 if the bill was passed. Joseph Price produced cheques for $1,000 and $2,430. Both are in E. Irving's favour. The former is countersigned by Irving and Rykert. McMaster and Carling were in Toronto looking for G. W. R. Legislation. The $2,000 was paid for newspaper influence, and the $430 sent to Carling, witness don't know how it was spent. There had not been any inducement held out to Rykert to support the Railway Bill. E. Irving was examined and denied having received any portion of the $2,480. The $1,000 was endorsed by him, but he thinks he returned the cheque to the cashier, and that he did not hand it to Rykert. Has no recollection of getting the cheque or giving it away.

This Company has been formed for the purposes of purchasing and working the valuable iron mines situated in the Townships of Templeton and Hull, in the County of Ottawa, and Province of Quebec, called the Haycock Iron Location.
Company holding the power under the Act to "carry on the business of extracting, for mining, smelting, manufacturing, dealing in and disposing of iron and other ores and metals, and the manufacturing, selling, dealing in, and disposing of steel workings, or the products of iron and steel."
The property to be acquired is fully described in the report of the Eminent Mining Engineer Dr. E. J. Chapman, Professor of Mineralogy and Geology in the University College, Toronto, (Vide prospectus) it may be briefly described as follows:—
1. SITE AND GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE PROPERTY.—The Haycock Iron Location comprises a compact area of 300 acres of mineral land, and 100 acres of timber land, situated in the Province of Quebec, about eight miles north-east of the City of Ottawa; together with an additional piece of land of 10 acres near the head of navigation on the River Gatineau, as described in the following statements:—
1. The north-half of Lot 1 in the 11th Range of Hull, comprising 100 acres of mineral land.
2. The adjoining lot 28 (north and south halves) of the 6th Range of Templeton, comprising 200 acres of mineral land.
3. The contiguous south-half of Lot 27 in the same Range, comprising 100 acres of timber land.
4. Ten acres in Lot 2 on the 6th Range of Hull, on the left bank of the River Gatineau, which has been secured partly to serve as a storing place and loading ground for shipping the ore, but chiefly as a convenient site for the erection of Furnaces. This area is connected with the mineral or iron area proper by a tramway of 6 1/2 miles in length. This tramway, of three feet gauge, has been very solidly constructed, and it is now in complete working order. It runs for a short distance through the Haycock property, and is then continued along the town-line between Hull and Templeton, on to the furnace-site on the Gatineau.
In addition to the 6 1/2 miles of tramway in complete running order, with full right of way from the orebeds to the furnace-site and shipping ground on the River Gatineau, the assets of the property include a Steam Sawmill, of 20 horse power, sawn timber and logs; a Boarding House; Manager's House; Store House; Office; Stables; Powder House, and Blacksmith's Shop. Also a Derrick and other mining plant, tools, etc.; together with about 5,000 tons of raised ore, and 30 tramway cars.
The quantity of the ore as described by Professor Chapman, is practically inexhaustible, it lies close to the surface and is easily mined, while its quality may be estimated from the fact that STEEL HAS BEEN MADE DIRECT FROM THE ORE. The fullest particulars of analyses and experiments proving these statements can be had at the Head Office of the Company, and at the Agents at Montreal.
The price to be paid for the purchase of the property is $250,000. One half prices before purchasing elsewhere.

This Company has been organized for the purposes of purchasing and working the valuable iron mines situated in the Townships of Templeton and Hull, in the County of Ottawa, and Province of Quebec, called the Haycock Iron Location.
Company holding the power under the Act to "carry on the business of extracting, for mining, smelting, manufacturing, dealing in and disposing of iron and other ores and metals, and the manufacturing, selling, dealing in, and disposing of steel workings, or the products of iron and steel."
The property acquired is fully described in the report of the Eminent Mining Engineer, Dr. E. J. Chapman, Professor of Mineralogy and Geology in the University College, Toronto, (Vide prospectus) it may be briefly described as follows:—
1. SITE AND GENERAL CHARACTER OF THE PROPERTY.—The Haycock Iron Location comprises a compact area of 300 acres of mineral land, and 100 acres of timber land, situated in the Province of Quebec, about eight miles north-east of the City of Ottawa; together with an additional piece of land of 10 acres near the head of navigation or the River Gatineau, as described in the following statement:—
1. The north-half of Lot 1 in the 11th Range of Hull, comprising 100 acres of mineral land.
2. The adjoining lot 28 (north and south halves) of the 6th Range of Templeton, comprising 200 acres of mineral land.
3. The contiguous south-half of Lot 27 in the same Range, comprising 100 acres of timber land.
4. Ten acres on Lot 2 on the 6th Range of Hull, on the left bank of the River Gatineau, which has been secured partly to serve as a storing place and loading ground for shipping the ore, but chiefly as a convenient site for the erection of Furnaces. This area is connected with the mineral or iron area proper by a tramway of 6 1/2 miles in length. This tramway, of three feet gauge, has been very solidly constructed, and it is now in complete working order. It runs for a short distance through the Haycock property, and is then continued along the town-line between Hull and Templeton, on to the furnace-site on the Gatineau.
In addition to the 6 1/2 miles of tramway in complete running order, with full right of way from the orebeds to the furnace-site and shipping ground on the River Gatineau, the assets of the property include a Steam Sawmill, of 20 horse power, sawn timber and logs; a Boarding House; Manager's House; Store House; Office; Stables; Powder House, and Blacksmith's Shop. Also a Derrick and other mining plant, tools, etc.; together with about 5,000 tons of raised ore, and 30 tramway cars.
The quantity of the ore as described by Professor Chapman, is practically inexhaustible, it lies close to the surface and is easily mined, while its quality may be estimated from the fact that STEEL HAS BEEN MADE DIRECT FROM THE ORE. The fullest particulars of analyses and experiments proving these statements can be had at the Head Office of the Company, and at the Agents at Montreal.
The price to be paid for the purchase of the property is $250,000. One half

ASSETS OVER - - $300,000.00.

Dominion Deposit - - $100,000.00.

This old and popular Company still continues to be the favored one in which to insure farm property. It is confined in its risks by its charter to this class of property, and has been doing the same kind of business for over 20 years, and there has never been a single year that it has not added largely to its Cash Assets. It has added over one half million of dollars the last eight years. Has never lost two contiguous houses or $5,000 by any one fire, sweeping or otherwise. Has never lost a dollar except upon farm property, private residences and their contents.

Therefore if you want to be safe beyond a contingency, insure your property in the

THEIR MENTIONED.
Passed 1874.
WHEREAS the Corporation of the sand Dollars, for certain Debentures of the said Corporation heretofore issued and falling due during the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four,

for which no sinking fund has been provided, and no funds are on hand for the payment of the same or any part thereof,
and the Municipal Council of the said Corporation have resolved to retire the said Debentures at maturity and to carry into effect the said objects, it will be necessary for the said the Corporation of the County of Lennox and Addington to raise the said sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars in the manner here-in-after mentioned.
And whereas it will require the sum of

lars to be raised Annually by special rate for the payment of the debt created by this By-Law and the interest thereon within the period of Twenty Years from the time at which this By-Law shall come into effect as also here-in-after mentioned.

And Whereas the amount of the whole rateable property of the said the Corporation of the County of Lennox and Addington irrespective of any future increase of the same, and irrespective of any income to be derived from the temporary investment of the sinking fund here-in-after mentioned, or any part thereof according to the last revised and equalized Assessment Roll of the said County, thousand Dollars.

And Whereas the amount of the existing debt of the said the County of Lennox and Addington is One Hundred and Sixteen Thousand Dollars for principal,
and no sum whatever for interest, and no
interest is in arrear.

And Whereas for paying the interest,
and creating an equal yearly sinking fund
for paying the said sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars as here-in-after mentioned,
it will require an equal annual special rate of eight fifteenths of a mill — in the dollar in addition to all rates to be levied
in each year

Therefore the Council of the Corporation of the County of Lennox and Addington enacts as follows:—

1. That it shall be lawful for the Warrent to raise by way of loan from any person do persons, body or bodies corporate who may be willing to advance the same upon the credit of the Debentures hereinafter mentioned a sum of money not exceeding in the whole the hands of the Treasurer for the purposes

and with the objects above recited.

2. That it shall be lawful for the said

tures to be made for such sums of money
as may be required, not less than One Hundred Dollars each to the amount in sealed with the seal of the said Corporation, and be signed by the Warden and Treasurer of the said the Corporation of the County of Lennox and Addington.

3. That the said Debentures shall be made payable in twenty years at furthest from the day hereinafter mentioned for this
By-Law to take effect, at the office of the Treasurer of the said County, and shall have attached to them Coupons for the payment of interest, which said Coupons shall be signed by the said Warden.

4. That the said Debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date thereof, which interest shall be payable half yearly
at the office of the Treasurer aforesaid.

5. That for the purpose of forming a Sinking Fund for the payment of the said
Debentures, and the interest at the rate aforesaid to become due thereon, an equal special rate of eight-fifteenths of a mill in the dollar, shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year upon all the rateable property in the said the County of Lennox and Addington, during the continuance of the said Debentures, or any of them, which sums shall be received by the Treasurer of the said Corporation for the time being

HEUMATISM.

FROM CAPT. THOS. R. GILLIATE, Church St. Conn. N. H. For 25 years I suffered severely from Rheumatism, being most of the time unable to straighten my leg, and often unable to walk. I had many remedies tried, but no relief. I was advised by a United States physician in the Province of New Brunswick, Canada, to use Graham's Pain Expectorator. I did so, and in a few days I was enabled to walk without more than temporary relief.

Graham's Pain Expectorator

made so complete a cure that I have not been troubled with Rheumatism since. Not more than 12 years ago, I was made by all respectable druggists and dealers in medicine. Price 50 cents.

A GREAT MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DEPEW'S MEDICAL VICTORY.

DR. DEPEW, OF PARIS, FRANCE, an eminent physician of foreign descent, has discovered a Great Blood Remedy—a Purely Vegetable Compound, named by physicians, Depew's Medical Victory, that cures every kind of impure Blood, and every disease that depends on impurity of the Blood, where the Lungs, Liver, and Kidneys, and other vital organs, are not wasted beyond the hope of repair.

For the cure of Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt-rheum, Eczema, Scald-head, Scaly Eruption of the Skin, Ulcers, and every Sore of all kinds, Boils, Humors in the Mouth and Stomach or Eyes, Sore Throat, Eruption on the head, and Pimples or Blisters on the face, it stands pre-eminently at the head of all other remedies. The facts, Humors, Scrofula, and Diseases of the Skin of whatever morbid nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system, in a short time, by the use of this Blood Remedy. One bottle, in such cases, will convince the most incredulous of its curative effects.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when it is obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when Keep the Blood pure and the health of the system will follow.

It is a Gentle Regulating Purgative, as well as a Tonic, &c. Possessing also the peculiar merit of acting as a powerful agent in relieving Congestion, and Chronic Inflammation of the Liver and all the Visceral Organs.

For Female Complaints, whether in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or at the setting of life, the Medical Victory has no equal.

In the cure of Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, and diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, its effects are surprising. For Regulating the Bowels, and curing Biliousness, Headache, Blisters, Neuralgia, Pains in the Back, and general Weakness and Debility, its curative powers are beyond money and beyond price. IT IS THE GREAT MEDICAL PURIFIER, AND A LIFE-GIVING PRINCIPLE, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the System, carrying off all poisonous matter and restoring the Blood to its healthy condition.
